Ashton Kutcher's reportedly been picked to play Steve Jobs. Now, who should play Woz, Laurene Powell Jobs, Jon Ive, and other important figures from the Apple founder's life? Here are our picks. 1 / 11 iStock/g-stockstudio To be considered as a movie extra, all you have to do is apply on a casting website. It's usually free, and you'll get emails and texts about the upcoming movies looking for background artists, says Christine Nelson, background casting director at Lee Genick/Sylvia Fay & Associates Casting. You'll confirm if you're available, and be able to talk to the casting directors from there. 2 / 11 iStock/Squaredpixels Make sure you're putting out an accurate image. You don't have to splurge on a professional portrait, but make sure the photo you attach to your profile is current. Go for a waist-up candid photo, or even a selfie. "Something that looks like how you want to represent yourself," says Nelson. "It's your marketing tool." Anyone can dress down, so wear a suit or nice dress to put your best self out there. Try out these tricks to make yourself look better in photos. 3 / 11 iStock/Petar Chermayev If you're particularly excited about the possibility of being an extra in a certain movie, pick up the phone and introduce yourself to the casting director. "Sometimes they'll call and say, 'I just want you to know who I am.' I appreciate that," says Nelson. But if the person on the other line is short with you, take the hint—some don't want to be bothered, and you're better off waiting to hear back, warns Nelson. You'll want to employ these 16 secret habits of naturally charming people. 4 / 11 iStock/BraunS "People show up 15 to 30 minutes late and think it's OK because they probably won't be ready to shoot, but that's not true," says Nelson. "They're usually well-oiled machines and ready to go." Make sure you're there by call time. If a car is supposed to pick you up, it will leave without you if you're running late. 5 / 11 iStock/fotostorm Don't agree to act in a movie that you don't have the wardrobe for. Period pieces will often provide costumes for background artists, but if you promise to dress up like a lawyer and show up with jeans, there's a good chance you'll be sent home, says Nelson. Not sure if the outfit you had in mind is acceptable? Take a couple extra shirts, and another skirt or pair of pants so you have options. "The best is to bring a good mix as a courtesy so wardrobe is happy," says Nelson. 6 / 11 iStock/Rawpixel-Ltd Even though you're in the background, that just-rolled-out-of-bed look isn't going to fly. "If you show up with clothes all wrinkled in a bag, you're not presenting yourself in a good light," says Nelson. Show up looking just as pressed and polished to be a movie extra as you would at any other job. Avoid these outfit mistakes that make you look messy. 7 / 11 iStock/bjones27 Films don't necessarily shoot to fit the season, so be aware that your costume might not fit the real-life temperatures. "Sometimes they're set in winter during summer or summer during winter," says Nelson. If you won't be able to handle the off-season outfits, you might want to wait for a different role. 8 / 11 iStock/halbergman Movie sets often run a tight ship, and you'll likely need two forms of photo ID when you arrive. "If you don't have that, you can't work," says Nelson. Leave valuables at home too so you don't lose them when you're shooting, she says. 9 / 11 iStock/Sanjeri "This business is hurry up and wait," says Nelson. If you get bored during gaps of time, make sure to bring a book or headphones to keep you entertained. 10 / 11 iStock/Martin Dimitrov You'll probably have to sign a nondisclosure agreement promising not to share what you see on set. Shut off your phone when the cameras are rolling, and resist the temptation to post what you see on social media. "With technology, everyone has a phone, which can sometimes be a bad thing," says Nelson. "No one wants their storyline to get out." Plus, you should make sure you're listening to any instructions the assistant director is giving the extras, which is tough if you're staring at your phone. 11 / 11 iStock/Haider Yousef No matter how big a fan you are, do not approach the actors. "They are in the mode of what they do, and that's the worst thing extras can do," says Nelson. Even though some actors will happily sign an autograph, others might get annoyed, and you could end up getting kicked off the set. These are the best pieces of movie trivia. But perhaps the most interesting addition is Kate Winslet's first screen test, not with Leonardo DiCaprio, but Jeremy Sisto of Clueless fame. Can you imagine if DiCaprio never said "I'm the king of the world?" and it became Sisto's signature line instead? What if Robert Redford had donned blue tights and red cape as Superman instead of Christopher Reeve? Here are some other interesting alternate castings you might not have known about: Marlon Brando as Jim Stark in "Rebel Without a Cause"; Brando was a contender for the classic tale of youth in revolt, but the role ultimately went to James Dean, who became a cultural icon. Check out footage of Brando's "Rebel" screen test below. Robert De Niro as Santino 'Sonny' Corleone in "The Godfather": Even though James Caan wound up landing the role of Sonny, De Niro probably wasn't too upset. Two years later, De Niro landed the role of the young Vito Corleone in "The Godfather: Part II," a role that earned him his first Oscar. Kurt Russell as Han Solo in "Star Wars": It seems like every actor in Hollywood in their 20s and 30s auditioned for Han Solo, but it was Harrison Ford who eventually got the role. George Lucas originally hired Ford as a carpenter to build cabinets for his home, and later to read lines opposite actors auditioning for Star Wars. It was during those auditions that Ford won over the director. Michelle Pfeiffer as Clarice Starling in "The Silence of the Lambs": Pfeiffer was originally offered the role of FBI agent Starling, but turned it down. And before Jodie Foster was cast, Meg Ryan, Geena Davis and Melanie Griffith all expressed interest in the role. For more alternate castings, check out this list of roles rejected by other stars.
