more.Add some color to your sugar skull mask....These printable sugar skulls as well as four different decorative designs as well as inspire your kiddo to create their own sugar skull design. Add color any way that strikes you young artist.I recommend printing on card stock if possible. It will create a nice sturdy mask and also ensure that your mask will hold up to any medium you choose.We've been loving this huge pack of Crayola markers in forty colors! Having so many colors to choose from makes for some great color combinations and just feels so much more special than the standard eight colors!Encourage your kiddos to explore other media like watercolor, oil pastel, sequins, or other small three dimensional objects!Make your own Day of the Dead mask....These designs are perfectly sized to be cut out and used as actual masks. Color first, especially if you're working with young artists. Coloring first will save them the frustration of coloring off and on the edge of the paper.Cut around the edges using sharp scissors. I don't mind leaving a slim white outline and it gives your kiddos a little wiggle room. The eye holes will need to be cut using an X-acto blade. Supervise or assist those little ones!Use a paper punch to create two holes on either side of the mask. Use twine, ribbon, or even elastic to create a band that fit's around your child's head. Another alternative would be to glue a craft stick to the bottom of the mask to create a mask meant to be held up to the face!More Day of the Dead resources....The Day of the Dead sounds like such a scary, ominous holiday. In reality it's such a colorful, beautiful celebration of family and loved ones.
