Tags make it particularly easy to locate specific play objects. We can look for a single game object, or look for multiple. Finding a single object can use the static GameObject.Find method. Find meobjectontag (string tag) to search for individual game objects. It is important to note that, in this way, game objects do not wonder in any particular order. If you look for a label that is used in multiple play objects on the scene, this function will not be able to guarantee what game object is returned. As such, it is more appropriate when we know that a game object uses such a label, or when we are not worried about the exact instance of GameObject that is returned. // Spaniard segment we do a static chain to allow us to consistency. Tag Rope Player = "Player" // Now we can use the label to reference our GameObject player. Object player play = gameObject. Finding a ray of GameObject cases can use the static gameObject function. Find meObjectswithtag (Estring Tag) to search for all game objects that use a particular label. This is a bit when we want to appoint through a group of game objects in particular. This can also be ostile if we want to find a single game object, but it can have multiple game objects using the same label. As we cannot guarantee the exact instance returned by GameObject. FindgameObjectwithtag (Estring Tag), we must instead recover a variety of possible GameObject instances with gameObject.
