internal and external are the only valid options. dependencies { implementation 'org.litepal.guolindev:core:3.2.3' } 2. For example you have two models, Album and Song. For example, gets the SQLiteDatabase with following codes: SQLiteDatabase db = LitePal.getDatabase(); Now the tables will be generated automatically with SQLs like this: CREATE TABLE album (id integer primary key autoincrement, name text unique default 'unknown', price real); CREATE TABLE song (id integer primary key autoincrement, name text not null, duration integer, album_id integer); 2. list configure the mapping classes. For example: --> This is the only configuration file, and the properties are simple. Support to use annotation to ignore mapping fields with ignore = true Add some magical methods in DataSupport for those who understand LitePal deeper.) A releaseDate field was added and price field was annotated to ignore. The models can be defined as below: public class Album extends LitePalSupport { @Column(unique = true, defaultValue = "unknown") private String name; @Column(index = true) private float price; private List songs = new ArrayList(); // generated getters and setters. Add SQLite keywords convert function to avoid keywords conflict. Improve query speed with optimized algorithm. Modify the models you defined in the mapping tag, and just make the version value plus one, the upgrade of database will be processed automatically without concern. You can create as many databases as you want at runtime. Java: List songs = LitePal.where("name like ? version configure the version of database. Support to store database file on any directory of external storage. 3.1.1. Support transaction. Deprecate DataSupport, use LitePal and LitePalSupport instead. > ... For example: --> The tables will be upgraded next time you operate database. Then copy the following codes into it. In the onCreate() method of Application will be fine. More for you to explore. Support crud operations for generic collection data in models. Include library Edit your build.gradle file and add below dependency. But there are some upgrading conditions that LitePal can't handle and all data in the upgrading table will be cleaned: Add a field which annotated as unique = true. Multi databases supported. Fully support kotlin programming. Fix known bugs. Quick Setup 1. Each time you want to upgrade your database, the version tag would helps. You should handle async operations by yourself. You can finish most of the database operations without writing even a SQL statement, including create or upgrade tables, crud operations, aggregate functions, etc. "external" means the .db file will be stored in the path to the directory on the primary external storage device where the application can place persistent files it owns which everyone can access. "internal" will act as default.
