What is the first thought that comes to mind when thinking of police officers? To many people the term “police officers” refers to the cold-blooded murderers who take advantage of their powers, the bastards who write tickets, the oppressors who stop freedom by beating protestors, the racists who locked up my kids, and many more negative connotations. Such connotations are engraved in people's minds through our “honorable and reliable” media, in which corruption flows like blood in our bodies.

Every time an incident with New York City police happens, the media blows it up with the help of its own favorite, Reverend Al Sharpton. Al Sharpton is the founder of the National Action Network, a non-profit civil rights organization. He believes that what he does “functionally is what Dr. King, Reverend Jackson and the movement [civil rights] are all about.” (Shankbone) In 1991, Sharpton made many negative remarks such as the ones about Jews creating riots against the Jewish community because an African American man, Leonard Jefferies, was fired for bigoted speech. Sharpton said, “ If the Jews want to get it on, tell them to pin the yarmulkes back and come over to my house.” (King) He also referred to Greek philosophers, astrologists, and mathematicians as “homos,” and while he discredited them for all their findings, he credited their findings to what he referred to as “we,” meaning the black race. I, personally, am not sure if he fights for civil rights or black supremacy. (Ward 192)

In 2009, Sharpton called for "federal investigation and intervention" against the New York City police department when an accidental shooting of an off-duty African American cop, Edwards, who was mistaken for a thief, occurred. He was not in uniform and wa...

...ow, and believe and hush over what they do not want. Can we truly trust them? I will remove all uncertainty and answer this question for you by saying, Absolutely not. And yet people do not try to stop that corruption and allow it to make their minds up by taking the media's stories and believing them.
