Harlem Renaissance: The Great Migration

Was it a positive influence because of the movements it had and the culture it has added and changed in society during that time.

The Great Migration was a major turning point America and society, including a change of culture and lifestyles. This was a contribution to the melting pot of America and combined great differences of people in a better way. Times were getting hard and people need a change. But people waited and waited change but hopes slowly we away. People of the Black Community had it the worst, between the cruel treatment they received from society and harsh working conditions, they deserved better. Many African Americans during that time made a decision that will change American......show more content...

When they arrived at their new location, their happened to be one more issue that was the largest of them all, racism. Racism was one of the many reasons why they moved. But during that time, they couldn't escape it. Which is a terrible thing. Society needed to change. Even finding a house was hard if whites owned the housing or if they lived near by. This was a constant struggle that they knew was not going to let them down. They were going to fight until they had the right. In the 20's Harlem New York became the capital of Black America, attracting black intellectuals and artists from across the country to share, contribute, and express their art, music, and culture. This part was called the Harlem Renaissance.

Blacks stood together during this movement and stood up for civil rights, but they were grateful for the movement that made their life easier. In the end, African Americans knew they deserved a lot more for what they were fighting for. I would fight for the same equality that I saw a white man with if I was in that time, and being treating...show more content... But just a train ride away, African Americans we able to find a new life and escape most of their daily struggles from the old west. They overcame many challenges to get where they got, but changed the world now and years to come. Culture spread and made people more comfortable and happy. Jobs grew, and the economy changed to make lives up north financially easier to live. People got together and changed this world in and out, to make a difference. Hopes of many people of started to be regained. Most racism a little while after slowly decreased. The Harlem Renaissance left a positive influence and touched everyone and a life changing
