A writer's vision and thought can be extracted from the words that they use in their stories. The evangelists in the Bible are no different. They are writing about events from memory; many of them were stories that were passed on generation to generation. Thus, their personal thoughts begin to make an entry into the way that they write their gospel and the words that they use. All of these stories show that there is nothing too great for faith. That no one with faith shall wait to receive a message from God. Jesus emph...

After reading and studying Markan text, it is clear what he thought of Jesus as a person and a leader. The way that Mark writes and the descriptions that he chose to include truly give a Markan picture of Jesus. Consequently, his words also are used to relate the words of Jesus with Mark's contemporaries. It is crucial to include every aspect of Mark and his audience when using Markan text to study Jesus.
