Fear of Crime among Immigrants

A crime is an act against the law. Even though police systems and prisons justify an unlawful act committed, crime continues to happen every day and every minute. People commit crimes for reasons such as problems with relationships, jealousy, anger, and money. Those against the surge of immigrants believe that immigrants cause the increase of crime rates in the U.S. On the contrary, those for immigrants believe that they instead reduce the rate of crime in the U.S. I believe that immigrants do not bring up the crime rate in the U.S because they fear of crime.

It is clear that people prefer living in a safe place instead of an unsafe place. This causes more immigrants to come to New York because it is seen as a haven. In New York, immigrants are known to reduce the rate of crime. Many people believe that immigrants contribute to higher crime rates in the U.S. But if they look at the statistics of many places in the U.S, they will find evidence against their views. Anti-immigrant people say immigrants bring up the rate of crimes because they know themselves some immigrants are criminals. However, this statement is biased because they are accusing the whole population of such acts on a small portion of immigrants that are involved in criminal activities.

A number of people choose to leave their own countries for their families. It is stated that an addition of people will contribute to conditions that lead to crime. However, the influx of immigrants does not automatically cause the crime rate in the U.S. to go up. The immigrants actually make their communities safer. "Police statistics show that Sunset Park is much safer than it was 20 years ago. Homicides are down more than 90 percent. Crime rates ha...
