Introduction: Conduct Disorder The hallmark of Conduct Disorder (CD) is an obvious and careless apathy for the rules, the rights, the emotions, and the personal territory of others. Aggression, deceitfulness, duress, and power over others are enjoyable to a child with CD. Children with CD pick fights, trespass, lie, cheat, steal, vandalize, display abusive behaviors, and, for older children, perpetrate unwanted sexual advances. The display of signs in younger children can be: ruthless bullying, lying for the purpose of lying, and stealing of useless things. Diagnosis: Jason Coleman of Conduct Disorder Jason Coleman meets the criteria for CD in DSM 4 TR: Axis 1, for CD with a specifier of 312.81 Childhood-onset type, severe; Axis II, ...show more content...

Oppositional Defiant Disorder (ODD) does include some of the features of CD, i.e., disobedience and opposition to authority, but ODD does not have the continual arrangement of severe behaviors of violating the rights of others, or violating the norms of society (American Psychiatric Association, 2008). The ADHD child even though they do display excitable and troublesome behavior, that behavior does not in and of itself breach age-suitable societal patterns therefore, I ruled out ADHD (American Psychiatric Association, 2008) in Jason's case. Although Jason is taking Ritalin it was more for his attention and concentration problems and not for CD because the behaviors escalated after his dose was increased. I don't think that the head injury can be ruled out as a contributing factor to the symptoms that Jason is experiencing (Centre, I., 2005). Rule out mood disorder because Jason does not appear to meet the criteria for a mood disorder or major depression (American Psychiatric Association, ...show more content...)

A multimodality treatment program that will use all the known family and community resources is the best approach to treatment of conduct disorder (Kaplan, H. I., Sadock, B. J., & Grebb, J. A. 1991). Behavior therapy with a special emphasis on Individual Parent Management Training, problem-solving skills, group assertiveness training, Individual Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), and Multisystemic Therapy, are Evidence Based Treatments (EBTs) shown to work well in treatment of CD (Eyberg, S., Nelson, M., & Boggs, S., 2008). Medications, such as, mood stabilizers, neuroleptics and stimulants with lithium being the most documented treatment, are also used in the treatment of CD (Geradin,
