The American people are living in a democracy, the best, yet youngest, form of government in the world. The ideals surpassed by none, a democracy so delighting the USA literally fights extensive battles to bring this serenity to other parts of the world. This is because there are established rights or entitlement for every individual is; one of the most revered is the freedom of speech. However, currently the American government is in direct violation the country's first amendment; they have been for almost one hundred years by creating a law regarding speaking out against the government as treason. This is the same government that so openly acknowledges the importance of the freedom of expression to their countrymen need to revisit Bill of Rights regarding the Espionage Act of 1917. Mr. Eugene Debs was a four-time presidential candidate compared in his day by New York Times reporter John Swinton to the revered Abraham Lincoln (Simkin). Debs served his country in many ways throughout the years, most famously in a prison cell. On September 14, 1918, Debs addressed the court not asking for immunity but relaying his message with his powerful words, "I never so clearly comprehended as now the great struggle between the powers of greed and exploitation... and... freedom and social justice" (Debs, 1918a). Mr. Julian Assange is an Australian journalist and publisher, gaining his success through a well-known site, Wikileaks. He is currently on the radar of the United States of America; as named members of the Senate and Congress verbally invoke the Espionage Act to go after Assange and his “leaked” documents (Wolf, 2010). In his own words, he knows from previous incarcerations, that the US too may seek the course of this legal action.
