Without notice, the government is beginning to control the lives of the United States citizens more and more. Under the radar, the law determines the rules and regulations for the healthcare system, the education system, and the currency system. Society revolves around money; therefore, the government controls the population. The unknown future of American civilization is a scary thought. Aldous Leonard Huxley expresses his opinion about society slowly becoming over taken by the authority in his novel, Brave New World. He creates a world with several links to society in two thousand and twelve.

In the book, Huxley predicts the future of the world, and he makes several key points that are seen in the twenty-first century. One connection made is the government controls the human race beginning at birth; in present day, the government controls America through the making of a green dollar bill. Huxley also reveals in his novel how the authority feels the world needs to be “stabilized”, and the law feels they have the right to keep the relationships between man and woman calm and passive. In today’s time, the government stabilizes relationships by allowing dating, divorces, and gay marriages to keep society equal and peaceful. Today’s government feels the need to keep a close eye on the relationships of the people as well as the educational system. For example, the government gives teachers specific standards to teach, and then the same power lowers the standards so “no child is left behind”(No Child Left Behind). As the standards are lowered, fewer students believe they need to think critically and begin to memorize rather than apply the information; which is what Huxley foresaw in Brave New World. Huxley also portrays his socie...

Huxley predicts the future of society in his book Brave New World if America does not take a stand to the government and become the operator, America will continue to be the manipulated machine. As of today, the government is the controller, and America is in his hands. America moves when told and as told. America is “safe” when civilization is with him, stabilized and standardized. The future of America should rest with the people of America and not the authority; a decision must be made.
