“I said what I have to say” (What Harper Lee). This is a quote from a very rare interview with the renowned author Harper Lee. Unlike many award winning authors, Harper Lee receives all her publicity from just one book, To Kill a Mockingbird. This was the only book Lee ever wrote, and the quote previously stated is Lee’s response when questioned why she did not write any other books. To look at the skeleton of To Kill a Mockingbird, you would say it is the type of book to appeal to all ages. The viewpoint is from spunky, Scout Finch. It tells of her adventures and seems to be quite entertaining From trying to dig out Boo Radley from his house to witnessing her father’s problems as a lawyer to an African American, what makes this book even more intriguing is that it seems to relate a lot to Harper Lee’s childhood. It holds many characteristics of her family and her friends. Not only does it reflect her life but it also seems to share many similarities with the time period it was written. So much of Harper Lee’s life and the time period it was written seems to be greatly influential in To Kill a Mockingbird.

Lee was born the youngest to Parents, Amasa Coleman Lee and Francis Cunningham Finch Lee. She has two older sisters, Alice Lee and Louise Lee, and one older brother Edwin Coleman Lee (What Harper Lee). She was born in the typical southern town of Monroeville Alabama. Monroeville was just another small town in which everyone knew everyone’s business (What Harper Lee). As a child Lee was opted into what would become a lifelong friendship. In kindergarten Lee was introduced to Truman Streckfus Persons, but most people today would identify him by his pen name of Truman Capote (Harper Lee. biography) She grew up to be known as t...
