When given the opportunity to describe yourself with one word it is important to find the word that has brought you to where you currently are in life. "Diligent" is the word that I can relate the most to myself.

The online dictionary defines diligent as 1. constant in effort to accomplish something; attentive and persistent in doing anything. 2. Done or pursued with persevering attention (Dictionary.com). This definition agrees to the way that I understand the word. Diligence can be broken down into two parts that will show how this one word is the product of different skills and characteristics. For a person to be diligent, they will first need to already be trying to accomplish something. This shows that they are adding value to their life by challenging themselves. Accomplishing something must be governed by rules, and this means the way to be diligent is to attempt to accomplish something carefully. It is not enough to try to accomplish, but rather to put regulations on yourself to make sure that the reward (of whatever it is you are trying to accomplish) is of true satisfaction.

When it comes to characteristics of people, being a diligent worker cannot be completely understood when taught by someone else. It is one of those rare traits that can only be taught by you when you realize that this is the way society wants people to be. Having a sense of pride from the effort you put in to your work will keep you addicted to being at a certain standard in any work you do. From my experiences, there is no bigger pay off than to be rewarded for the carefully chosen work you put in. Whether it is on school assignments, or general house labor, paying attention and being persistent will lead to success.

It is vital to be diligent in order to surpass the average, and go for advanced. I've found throughout my life that people usually appreciate diligent workers. Getting recognition for diligence is not nearly as important as staying at a level where everything you do is diligent work. I have found it necessary to apply this word to my life because it has helped me in my past and will be the reason for the success of my future.
