Into the Wild, a novel written by Jon Krakauer, as well as a 2007 film directed by Sean Penn, focuses on the adventures of Christopher Johnson McCandless, a young individual who set out on a journey throughout the Western United States, wanting to get away from his family and society, going under an alter ego named "Alexander Supertramp". There are many characteristics that describe McCandless, such as "naïve", "adventurous", and "independent". In the book, Krakauer described McCandless as being very "intelligent". While Krakauer assumes McCandless as "intelligent", Penn considers McCandless as a "saint".

To prove his theory of McCandless being "intelligent", Krakauer wrote about the time McCandless graduated from college. McCandless went to Emory University in Atlanta, Georgia. He graduated in April of 1990 with a bachelor's degree in both history and anthropology. He also maintained a 3.72 grade point average during his college experience. Wayne Westerberg, one of the many people that McCandless encountered throughout his journey, even said that, "You could tell right away that Alex was intelligent. He read a lot, and used a lot of big words," (Krakauer 18). McCandless going to Emory, and attaining a near perfect grade point average, implies how intelligent he must be.

In contrast to Krakauer's view of McCandless being "intelligent", Penn brings up the scene in his film where McCandless fixes Jan Burres and Rainey's relationship with each other. During his travels, McCandless ran into Burres and Rainey, who were, at the time, not getting along together. However, when McCandless showed up, it somehow caused Burres to have a change of heart about her and Rainey's relationship, and she wanted to get back together with him. ...

... willing to do a job, and getting praised for his work further indicates his potential of being a saint.

Both Krakauer and Penn have different ways of describing McCandless' personality. Krakauer thought of McCandless as a very "intelligent" person, while Penn thought of McCandless as a saint. They also provided good examples to show their opinion on McCandless, like when Krakauer mentioned McCandless graduating from Emory to show him being "intelligent", and when Penn used McCandless fixing Burres and Rainey's relationship to show him being a saint. Krakauer may think that McCandless is intelligent, but when it comes to Penn's opinion, he will think of McCandless as being a saint.
